

I work extremely hard to support my family, and travel by air for business and pleasure. I'm required to be constantly in touch with the office, clients, vendors etc.

One of the few places I cannot be found electronically is on an airplane, and I like it this way! God forbid I should be allowed to close my eyes or catch a quick nap.

Bad enough I'm wedged into cramped space, the last thing I'd want is to be assaulted by someone else's personal or business conversations. There are very few conversations that cannot wait until you get on the ground. Let's keep it that way.

Do you recall the last time you flew and a baby was crying two rows back?

Imagine

being surrounded by gabby travelers.

Spare me please.
